- Israel Objects to Building School in East Jerusalem, Says It Would Endanger Nearby Police Station. School in Sheikh Jarrah 'could constitute a threat to the facility and its combatants,' state says. NGO: 'The government has found a new excuse to prevent building schools in East Jerusalem'. Israel objects to opening a school in East Jerusalem, claiming it would endanger a nearby Border Police base that was built in the neighborhood, Army Radio reported Wednesday morning. The school, which was to be built by a private entrepreneur in the Sheikh Jarrah neighborhood, was to consist of four floors and 39 classrooms, from kindergarten to high school. The city supported the plan due to the acute shortage of schools in the capital's Arab community. Recently however, the Finance Ministry's Government Housing Administration submitted an objection to the school, arguing that since its location is 20 meters from a Border Police base, it "could constitute a threat to the facility and its combatants". "The government has found a new excuse to prevent building schools in East Jerusalem," the Ir Amim NGO said in response. "First Israel builds a military base in a Palestinian neighborhood, then, impertinently, it infringes on the neighborhood's children's basic right to education". "The mayor has a duty to make sure the plan is approved and that Sheikh Jarrah gets a much needed school" the NGO said. Jerusalem's Planning and Building Committee met Wednesday to discuss the state's objection. "The proposed proximity and height differences are a security threat and will require several additional security measures," according to the objection. The city engineer recommended to the committee to reduce the building's height and make the base's fence higher. The Knesset's Education Committee last week held a special debate on the shortage of classrooms in East Jerusalem, as a High Court of Justice ultimatum in the matter draws to a close. In February 2011 the High Court gave the government and Jerusalem municipality five years to find enough classroom space for East Jerusalem children, or the government will have to pay private schools to take care of the matter. The ruling was in response to a petition filed by the Association for Civil Rights in Israel on behalf of parents who could not register their children in the city's public-school system because of a lack of classrooms. ACRI says the shortage means many children must be turned away each year. (Haaretz 11 February 2016)

now realized by construction of the Begin Highway extension – a six-lane segment of the highway that runs through the center of the Palestinian neighborhood of Beit Safafa. The extension project is currently nearing completion despite residents' protracted battle to block development. The Begin Highway is the backbone of the road system in Jerusalem – a ring road that expedites north-south travel and links to Tel Aviv via road 443. Once completed the Begin extension through Beit Safafa will allow for a continuous stretch of highway that enables uninterrupted travel from the Gush Etzion settlement bloc south of Jerusalem, to the Givat Ze'ev settlement bloc north of the city and finally to Tel Aviv via Road 443. The Ma'ale Adumim/E-1 bloc is already linked to the Begin Highway via Highway 1. At the end of 2013, Ir Amim's monitoring revealed that the Municipality had prepared a plan for an interchange connecting the Beit Safafa extension to Road 60, intending to win approval without first conducting a requisite environmental survey and adopting subsequent recommendations. Bowing to pressure from within the planning process, authorities held back on taking further steps to advance the project. Authorities now maintain that there is an old plan for Road 60 on the books. Within the past several months, building permits for the Rosemarin Street tunnel were issued according to the preexisting plan. In addition, today the Local Committee will discuss a new plan (TPS 258270) to expand Road 60 in the area adjacent to the southern end point of the Begin Highway. Construction of the tunnel, reported above, has already commenced despite the fact that this new plan has yet to be approved. (Ir Amim 11 February 2016)

- Israel Dismantles Palestinian Prefab Classrooms Near Jerusalem. Residents said the move reflected government policy to remove Palestinians from the area to expand settlement construction near Ma'aleh Adumim. Army and Civil Administration forces have dismantled prefab homes and classrooms for the Abu Anwar community east of Jerusalem near the settlement of Ma'aleh Adumim. Resident Ahmed Ibrahim told Haaretz the troops Saturday night loaded the dismantled homes onto trucks after taking everything inside. The rooms served as classrooms for first- to third-graders, as well as a staff room. Ibrahim said the seven homes had been received recently to house 40 students and let them study in better conditions than in the previous classrooms made out of tin sheets. Palestinian news agency Wafa said the homes had been bought with aid from the French government. It said the children had nowhere else to study, while older students had to walk five kilometers to school. For its part, the Civil Administration said four prefab structures had been seized in the area (Abu An Nawar area), known as E-1, saying they had been placed there illegally. In recent years, the Civil Administration has demanded that the authorities demolish buildings that international organizations, particularly European ones, have donated. Local people said the operation reflected government policy to remove Palestinians from the area to expand settlement construction and cut off the West Bank from Jerusalem in the E-1 area. - Israel Demolishes 23 Homes in Hebron Area to Make Way for IDF Training Zones. Latest development in multiyear battle leaves 60 children, 18 adults without dwellings. The Civil Administration in the West Bank on Tuesday demolished 23 homes and three outhouses in the southern Hebron hills villages of Jinba and Halawa. According to Israeli activists who reached Jinba by midday, shortly after the demolitions, 78 people had been living in the newly-built homes, including 60 children. These are two of the 12 villages in the area that have been waging a legal battle for 17 years in an attempt to prevent their evacuation and demolition so they can be used as army training areas. The European Union has been closely following the villagers’ campaign, and has repeatedly stated it would view their evacuation as a coerced uprooting of a protected population, a contravention of international law. On Monday morning, the State Prosecution and lawyers for the Association of Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI), as well as the villagers’ attorney Shlomo Lecker, announced that a bridging process started in October 2013 had failed. To the shocked surprise of residents and lawyers, within hours of informing the High Court of Justice of this development, Civil Administration officials arrived in these two villages and marked 40 dwellings for demolition. Less than 24 hours later they returned, accompanied by the army, and started destroying these structures. They also temporarily blocked a road leading to Jinba and confiscated vehicles and five solar panels. The bridging procedure, mediated by law professor Yitzhak Zamir, was suggested by the High Court of Justice. The two sides were sworn to secrecy during this process. However, the Society of St. Yves learned that during the procedure the army demanded that residents leave their homes for a few days each month so that military exercises could be held in the area. The residents objected, leading to the termination of the bridging process. Prior to the process, the state's position was that residents of eight villages must move to the village of Yatta permanently, allowing them to cultivate their land and graze their sheep in the area at times when the army was not conducting exercises there, namely on weekends and Jewish holidays. Two more periods for cultivation and grazing would also be allowed during the year. Permanent residence in the villages would not be permitted. The residents of four other smaller villages were permitted to remain in the area, according to the state's position in 2012. The demolition was interrupted and did not extend to all 40 structures that were slated for demolition after the Society of St. Yves – the Catholic Center for Human Rights – filed a petition to halt the demolitions with the High Court of Justice on Tuesday morning. The court issued a temporary injunction until the state's reply is received in seven days. All the structures demolished on Tuesday were newly constructed dwellings, built in 2014 while the bridging process was in progress. They were made of concrete bricks, with corrugated tin roofs. Israel has not developed any construction plans for these villages, which have been there since the 19th century. Thus, any construction there is deemed illegal. However, natural growth and overcrowding have compelled residents to build even without permits. Fifteen of the demolished structures were in Jinba and the rest in Halawa. Many were built with financing provided by European and other foreign agencies. All 12 villages in the area developed naturally from settlements of cave-dwellers, who had originally inhabited the numerous caves in the area. These outlying areas of the adjacent town of Yatta started developing by the mid-19th century. In some of these villages, stone houses were already built before 1967. The residents always maintained social, family and economic ties with Yatta. The area around these villages was already declared a closed military zone back in the late 1970s. Only permanent residents were allowed to dwell there. In August and September 1999 most of the villagers received evacuation orders, based on the claim that they were "illegally residing within a live-fire zone." The authorities informed them that they were deemed "intruders into a fire range." On November 16, 1999 the army forcibly removed 700 residents, destroying houses and wells, as well as confiscating property. The residents were left without homes or any means of making a living. Attorney Roni Pelli from ACRI expressed her regret that "the day after the end of the bridging process the army rushed to demolish so many structures, leaving dozens of children, women and men without a roof over their heads in the coldest month of the year.” A defense official told Haaretz that the structures that were demolished and the solar panels that were confiscated “were erected without permits within the firing zone.” He added that “during the bridging process conducted by the Civil Administration to settle the matter of these structures, residents were unwilling to reach a settlement, while continuing with their illegal construction. This led to enforcement of the law”. (Haaretz 3 February 2016)

- Jordan Valley Settlers Took 150 Acres From Palestinians in 2015. Israeli army, civil administration were apparently unaware of new land grabs. During 2015, Jordan Valley settlements appropriated 600 dunams (150 acres) of Palestinian farmland in an area that is off-limits to Palestinians for “security reasons”. After the West Bank was occupied in 1967, the Israel Defense Forces issued Military Order 151, which prohibits Palestinians from entering the area between the border fence and the Jordan River. This order remained in effect even after the signing of the peace treaty with Jordan. The area contains tens of thousands of dunams of Palestinian-owned land that was cultivated by the Palestinians until they were shut out. Because the Jordan River passes through the area, the land is especially fertile and good for agriculture. In the early 1980s, the Ministerial Committee on Settlement Affairs issued a resolution permitting armed Jewish residents of the Jordan Valley to cultivate government-owned land in the area. Ariel Sharon instructed settler leaders to cultivate the entire area, going beyond the provisions of the resolution. In January 2013, Haaretz reported that 5,000 dunams of these lands were being cultivated by the settlers, many of them after receiving land allocations from the World

Zionist Organization in the '80s. In the wake of that report, two petitions were submitted to the High Court of Justice. During the hearings on those petitions it emerged that some of the plots from which the Palestinians were being blocked were actually west of the border fence. A new, corrected order is meant to be issued shortly. As for the Palestinian plots that are being farmed by settlers, the state refused to take a position and instead is trying to come to an agreement with the Palestinians on compensation, so far without success. Now it turns out that despite the High Court hearings and the efforts by the IDF General Staff to address the issue, in 2015 settlers began cultivating an additional 600 dunams owned by Palestinians in three different parts of the border zone. Until Haaretz contacted them, neither the army nor the Civil Administration was aware of the new land grabs, and it is not clear what they plan to do about it. Last month, settlement researcher and left-wing activist Dror Etkes criticized what he called "the harmonious coexistence between what is called 'security concerns' and the ongoing enterprise of theft and expropriation [of Palestinian lands] by the government, which has flourished for the past 50 years". As Etkes put it, "We can assume that had they not petitioned the court, the situation would have stayed the same for many more years". Taufiq Jabrin, a lawyer representing some of the Palestinians, said "the state pretty much confessed to doing something illegal, but they have yet to decide what they want to do with it There is nothing to talk about, we want our land back". - Almost All West Bank Land Deals for Illegal Settlements Forged, Investigation Finds. From straw men to cash-stuffed suitcases, new investigation reveals that 14 out of 15 acquisitions by right wing firm of West Bank lands from Palestinians were forged. A fraud squad investigation has revealed that 14 of 15 supposed real estate acquisitions made by Al-Watan, a company run by pro-settlement activist Ze'ev Hever and owned by the right wing Amana, were forged. Details of the West Bank forgery industry were broadcast on Tuesday in an investigative report on the Channel 10 program HaMakor with Raviv Drucker. In recent years, whenever the state sought to evacuate illegal outposts in the Binyamin region, Al-Watan officials would announce that they had bought the local lands from their Palestinian owners. The documents often turned out to be forged. A police investigation that was opened in the case ended, and the case was transferred to the state prosecutor. The police did not interrogate Hever, but by questioning a chain of straw men it emerged that 14 of the 15 supposed deals were forged. An investigative report by Raviv Drucker documents two Palestinians who acted as straw men for Al-Watan. The straw men would buy the lands from people using forged documents purporting to be those of the real landowners (many of whom are no longer alive) and then transfer them to Amana in a fake deal. One of them, Akram, said to the camera, "I signed on many plots and lands." Referring to the land upon which the outpost of Amona was established he said: "I signed in Silwad," he said, referring to a West Bank Palestinian town northeast of Ramallah. "They told me there is land with such and such a number, and another plot with number ... sign. I signed so many times for many lands. I made five or six deals." He added: "I told them I am signing for all the Palestinians, but let me live in Israel because of my children. My children are in Israel, and I don't see them, and I am always entering Israel and going to jail because I have no permit, and I tell them in the investigation that I am threatened. I have a problem in the Palestinian Authority, and I am threatened unless you let me live in Israel. I sold [land] because they would help me, and no one is helping me. I am suffering from complexes now." Straw men, cash suitcases The two straw men attest that at the signing, an Israeli lawyer from Jerusalem, who was investigated in the case and whose name is barred from publication under a gag order, handed them a suitcase with half a million shekels ($126,400). When they go outside, the lawyer takes the suitcase back.

The goal is to fake a deal. Mohammed, one of the straw men who was interviewed, said that he sat with the lawyer in a restaurant, and afterwards went up to his office. “He told me that this man’s friend cannot put the land under his name because of the Income Tax Authority,” he explained. “I signed on the papers and afterward he gave me a suitcase full of money and told me, ‘Take this.’ When I went downstairs, he took the money back and told me, ‘Take, this is what you get.’ That’s all.” The investigative report documents attorney Eytan Lehman meeting with Akram at a gas station after he learned that Akram was speaking with Drucker, and instructs him to call him and tell him that he does not remember anything, without realizing that he was being recorded. “The question is if you can have the conversation with him,” he said in the recording. “Tell him [Drucker] perhaps I no longer remember he story blah blah blah, and then he will tell you: ‘but don’t worry, I know the whole story.’ Tell him what does he mean ‘know the whole story,’ for you don’t remember what I said to the police or something like that ... Try to get it out of him without him understanding.” Hever responded by saying he does not have knowledge of the report's content. Al Watan responded to the report, saying all of their land deals were done legally. (Haaretz 2 February 2016)

- An Israeli group known as Saving Jewish Jerusalem called for the immediate establishment of a “security fence” in occupied Jerusalem in order to separate it from its eastern part. The group was founded by the former cabinet minister Haim Ramon and a number of Knesset members and former army leaders, Maariv Hebrew newspaper revealed. “Saving Jewish Jerusalem's platform, which will also be presented to the public, calls for handing control of 28 Palestinian villages in East Jerusalem to the Palestinian Authority (PA). The villages in question had been an integral part of the West Bank until Israel annexed them in 1967.” By removing some 200,000 Palestinians from the municipal boundaries of Jerusalem, the city’s Jews will constitute more than 80% of its residents, and the percentage of Palestinians will drop to less than 20%, from the nearly 40% today, according to the newspaper. Not only that, the group stresses, revoking the Palestinians’ Israeli residency permits will ease the economic burden these villages impose on the Israeli taxpayer, some 2-3 billion Israeli shekels ($500-$750 million) in social and medical care. Members of the movement argue that the Palestinian villages are massively detrimental to the prosperity of the Israeli capital in terms of security, demographic balance, standard of living and economic well-being. (Pal Info 7 February 2016)

- EU calls on Israel to stop demolishing Palestinian homes. Diplomatic wrangling ratchets up over European-funded prefab homes given to Palestinians in West Bank, which Israel says are illegal. BRUSSELS, Belgium – The European Union on Saturday called on Israel to halt the demolition of Palestinian housing, some of which was EU-funded, and reiterated its opposition to expanding Israeli settlements in the West Bank. “In the past weeks there have been a number of developments in Area C of the West Bank, which risk undermining the viability of a future Palestinian state and driving the parties yet further apart,” the EU diplomatic service said in a statement. It referred to Israel’s decision on January 25 to declare 154 hectares (380 acres) of land near Jericho in the West Bank as state land, with reported plans to build around 150 new residences for settlers. This was followed by the demolition of several Palestinian residences in the south Hebron hills on Wednesday. “This is particularly concerning both because of the extent of the demolitions and also the number of vulnerable individuals affected, including children who need support,” the EU said, adding that “demolitions included EU-funded structures.” “We call on the Israeli authorities to reverse the decisions taken and to halt further demolitions,” it said. Foreign ministers from the 28 EU nations had confirmed “the EU’s firm opposition to Israel’s settlement policy” and criticized the actions including demolitions, confiscation and forced transfers. UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon said Friday he was “ashamed” at a lack of progress in the Israeli-Palestinian peace process, which has been deadlocked since a US peace mission collapsed in April 2014. Israel has criticized the EU-funded construction as “illegal” and intended to create facts on the ground on the Palestinian side. Army Radio reported Thursday that Israeli inspectors were having difficulty keeping up with the pace of prefabricated homes which, it said, are delivered flat-packed in the dead of night to be assembled early in the morning. According to the report, the EU has built more than 200 structures in Area C of the West Bank in recent years, territory which, according to the Oslo Accords signed in 1993 between the Israelis and Palestinians, falls under full Israeli civil and security control. Ten prefabs arrived in the past two weeks alone, the radio report claimed. Israeli forces demolished 24 out of 40 targeted structures on Tuesday in and around the village of Khirbet Jenbah south of Hebron — 10 of them EU-funded — after the buildings were declared to be located in a military firing zone by the army body that oversees civilian activities in the territories. The demolitions came after a protracted arbitration battle failed to produce results, the Defense Ministry stated. The High Court of Justice ordered an emergency stay to the demolition order after a European group appealed the decision. The stay will last at least until a February 9 hearing before the court. On Thursday morning, Israeli forces demolished five tents, three barns and an outside toilet it said had been built without permits in the village of Tammun in the northeastern West Bank, the Ynet news site reported. Danny Danon, Israel's ambassador to the UN, on Thursday accused the EU of hypocrisy. "They can't come and on the one hand blame Israel for creating facts on the ground and yet spend hundreds of millions of dollars on a comprehensive plan for illegal construction," he told Army Radio. He said that while it was fine for the EU to build in Area C in coordination with Israel, "in the same breath, there's a system that... like thieves in the night, they are building illegal buildings... to create territorial contiguity for the Palestinians. They are creating facts on the ground instead of pressuring the Palestinians to return to the negotiating table." Army Radio said many of the trailer-type buildings arriving in the West Bank carried the names of the EU or an EU-affiliated organization and were being delivered to areas such as the Jordan Valley and the hills leading down to Jericho. Israeli supervisors usually identified and dismantled them quickly "but the phenomenon has broadened to the extent that the supervisors' unit doesn't always manage to keep up with the pace." Asserting that Area C is "part of the occupied Palestinian territory and part of any viable future Palestinian state," the EU Mission in Israel said the union had stepped in on humanitarian grounds because of Israel's failure to approve more than a handful of master plans that would allow the Palestinians to build themselves. All EU activity in the West Bank was "fully in line with international humanitarian law" and formed part of efforts to promote economic development and improve the quality of life of Palestinian communities in Area C in the private sector, the environment and agriculture," said the statement. - Israeli Occupation Authorities approved the expansion of "Atarot settlement industrial zone", located near Qalandiya airport, north of Jerusalem city. According to the Israeli resources, the Israeli Planning and construction committee in the Israeli Municipality of Jerusalem approved a plan to expand the aforementioned area. According the plan, the construction of building will be on 240 thousand square meters of land (the percentage of construction 300%). And each buildings will consist of 3 floors, and the building area will cover about 60% of the targeted land. (Al-Quds 12 February 2016)

- Israel Broke Ground on 1,800 Settlement Homes in 2015, Peace Now Says. The government's message to the settlers is that construction will be approved after the fact, the group says. Israel authorized 350 new housing units and broke ground on around 1,800 homes in West Bank settlements last year, Peace Now said in a report released Sunday. For a year and a half, urban planning in the settlements has been frozen and nearly no new construction has been approved. However, nothing bars local government from using existing construction plans. In the absence of new plans, efforts have been heightened to make good on existing plans. According to the Peace Now group, 15 percent of construction last year, or 265 housing units, was done in unauthorized settlement outposts. Only a tiny fraction is being carried out with the participation of the defense establishment's Civil Administration (the ultimate civil authority in the West Bank settlements). In 2012, the state committed to setting up a criminal-complaint mechanism regarding building in the settlements, but the launching process is mired in bureaucracy. Last year, construction included 1,550 permanent housing units and 250 prefab homes. Also, work began to prepare land for another 700 housing units. In Kochav Ya'akov near Ramallah, for example, construction has begun on 105 units. In Immanuel, the number is 37 units, with lots being prepared for another 100 units. In Ariel, there are 133 such units and another 27 in Karnei Shomron. In addition, three more outposts have been authorized, amid the announcement that several others will be authorized. "The government's message to the settlers is 'Carry out illegal construction and we will approve it retroactively,'" Peace Now wrote. "The Netanyahu government claims that the plans receiving approval are plans that don't add new construction and are therefore not important. But in practice this policy of retroactive approval of plans empties the planning process of meaning. The government's message to the settlers is that in practice, there is no need for planning and advance approval of plans, as ultimately the construction will be approved after the fact". - Israel steps up demolitions in the West Bank. Data indicates that the Israeli Civil Administration has noticeably stepped up its demolition of large Palestinian buildings in Area C of the West Bank since the beginning of the year, which saw a particular rise during the first half of February. A report by Amira Hass in Israel's Haaretz newspaper indicated that in the past few weeks, 293 large buildings were demolished compared to the 447 large buildings that were demolished over the course of 2015. Based on this information, the Israeli authorities are demolishing an average of 49 large buildings every week, compared to last year's average of 9 a week. The demolition operations during this year included at least 93 residential buildings, leaving 480 people homeless, including 220 children. According to the report, the Ministerial Committee on Settlement Affairs, led by Jewish Home's Moti Yogevev, is pressuring the representatives of the Civil Administration to pick up the pace on demolitions and the evacuation of Palestinians from Area C. They have also been focusing on demolishing buildings funded by international organizations, especially European organizations. According to the text of a closed session held in August, the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories Yoav Mordechai, stated that an immediate demolition order will be issued against any "illegal and European funded building" and a letter of protest sent to the embassy of the funding country. According to figures from the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA), 104 buildings funded by European countries have been demolished over the past few weeks, while the number of those demolished or confiscated in 2015 was 108. This suggests a 230 percent increase in the demolition rate. (Haaretz & Middle East Monitor 19 February 2016)

- Israeli report: More than 400,000 settlers in West Bank. The number of settlers living in 128 illegal settlements in the occupied West Bank, excluding Jerusalem, has reached 406,302, an Israeli report revealed. The report, issued by former Member of the Knesset Yaakov Katz, suggested that the Israeli settlements are distributed amongst 11 settlement blocs, the largest of which is located in the Jordan Valley, while the most densely populated is the Benjamin settlement bloc. The Benjamin bloc consists of nearly 26 illegal Israeli settlements and its population is over 83,000 settlers according to the most recent figures for 2015. There are 27 Israeli settlements in the Jordan Valley, with over 8,100 settlers. The report showed that the past two years witnessed a 4.4 per cent increase in the number of settlers in the West Bank, in addition to the 350,000 settlers who have settled in the 20 settlement blocs in occupied East Jerusalem. According to the report, the number of settlers in the occupied West Bank will reach 1.2 million by 2036. (Middle East Monitor 19 February 2016)
- Herzog: Netanyahu must finish security barrier around West Bank settlement of Ariel. "The residents of Ariel deserve the same protection as the residents of Tel Aviv," says opposition leader during visit to Ariel. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu must complete the security barrier around the settlement blocs, including the West Bank city of Ariel, opposition leader Isaac Herzog said Tuesday. “The residents of Ariel deserve the same protection as the residents of Tel Aviv,” said the Zionist Union leader during a visit to the southern Samarian city. Placing the barrier “around Ariel is not a luxury. It is a security necessity that the state owes its citizens. It is unacceptable for the barrier around the settlements blocs to be only partially constructed,” Herzog said. Ariel is the fourth largest settlement and is home to 18,400 people, as well as the University of Ariel. It is located some 16 kilometers over the pre-1967 lines. A 2006 cabinet vote called for the barrier to be constructed around that bloc as well as the Gush Etzion and Ma’aleh Adumim blocs. But to date only 60 percent of that 790 km. route has been completed. According to the latest data provided to The Jerusalem Post, the project itself has been mostly frozen since 2007. In a written response, the Defense Ministry told the Post last week, “Thus far, 470 km. of the security barrier have been completed.” It added, “an additional 71 km. still remain.” That would account for a built up route of 541 kilometers. In October 2014, the Defense Ministry told the Post that 460 km. of the barrier had been completed out of a 525 km. route that did not include the blocs of Ariel, Ma’aleh Adumim and Gush Etzion. On Tuesday, however, Herzog spoke of the significance of constructing those sections of the barrier both from a security perspective and as a way to separate from the Palestinians. He has been speaking about this issue as part of an overall separation plan that he unveiled last month based on his new understanding that a two-state solution is not feasible at this time. “We have to defend the blocs with a separation contagious separation barrier that will prevent terrorist infiltrations on one hand and construction on the other side of the barrier on the other hand,” Herzog said. It will also allow Palestinians outside the barrier to take charge of their own life, he said. “We can’t arrive at an agreement with the Palestinians, but we can at least separate the two peoples. We have to create a border beyond which we are no longer building,” he said. “Otherwise the situation will only get worse.” He added that of course, the IDF would remain in the territory beyond the barrier. “We need to create a reality of two separate peoples rather than one living amongst the other. Only in this way will we secure Israel’s existence as a Jewish nation and not an Arab-Jewish state,” Herzog said. (JPOST 24 February 2016)

- Jerusalem Municipality to submit NIS 7 billion 2016 budget for final approval. Budget to include ‘dramatic increases’ for education, residential areas, culture and economic development. Following heated arguments between Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat and the

Finance Ministry over the municipality's emergency economic needs amid an ongoing terrorism wave, Barkat announced he will submit the 2016 municipal budget to the City Council for final approval by Monday. This year's annual budget, which at NIS 7 billion is 5% larger compared to last year's, "continues the increase in allotments for education, residential areas, neighborhoods, culture, and economic development from 2015," the municipality said. "This continued growth in the city budget has been made possible because of funds Barkat and the municipality secured from the government of Israel, and from growth in independent income in the city." The announcement comes after a very public, protracted battle between Barkat and Finance Minister Moshe Kahlon over considerable emergency funds for the capital, which culminated in a city-wide sanitation strike by fired workers, leaving the city littered in refuse. The conflict came to an end in January when the ministry agreed to allocate NIS 205 million to balance the municipal budget, allowing the mayor to rehire the sanitation workers and cease threats of massive municipal layoffs. "I am pleased that the government of Israel understands that strengthening Jerusalem must be a top priority for the country. Our response to terrorism is to continue to strengthen and develop the city of Jerusalem," said Barkat. Deeming 2016 "a crucial struggle for the future of Jerusalem," Barkat pledged that every resident of the struggling city will benefit from the large budget, which he said "will continue the trends of intense investments that began in recent years." "In 2016, we will continue the dramatic improvements that we have seen over the past seven years," he said. "The emphasis, as always, will be on education and investment in the youth, since they are our future." Barkat added that "massive investments will continue in residential neighborhoods, in improving the appearance of the city, in playgrounds, schools and kindergartens, in cultural institutions and dozens of events and festivals, roads, intersections and traffic, in municipal services and aid for the elderly and needy." Moreover, he said the money is intended to reduce "gaps between the various sectors in the city, and in all walks of life," including Arab and Jewish residents of the capital. "Jerusalem is growing and developing rapidly, and we will continue to make every effort to work to improve the quality of life for you, the residents," he added. Of the NIS 7 billion, Barkat said NIS 803 million will be invested in infrastructure and transportation; NIS 456m. will go toward construction of public buildings, community centers, swimming pools and youth movement buildings; an additional NIS 128m. will be earmarked for education; NIS 20m. will go toward development; NIS 18.5m. toward culture, sports and leisure; and NIS 57m. toward neighborhood development. It remains unclear what the remainder of the budget will be spent on. (IPOST 28 February 2016)
