- Israeli Ex-minister Proposes Walling 200,000 Arabs Out of Jerusalem. This is not a 'separation' plan, it's an annexation plan. It would effectively separate people from their families, property, hospitals, schools, jobs and holy places,' says PLO Secretary General Saeb Erekat. In the bus, which was flanked on either side by Border Police jeeps, were former cabinet minister Haim Ramon (Labor) and a number of former senior officials in the defense establishment. The officials were former police commanders Alik Ron, Arye Amit and David Zur, Col. (ret.) Shaul Arieli and former adviser to Jerusalem mayors Amir Cheshin – all members of the Movement to Save Jewish Jerusalem. The tour was intended to advance their plan to withdraw unilaterally from most of the capital's Palestinian neighborhoods and build a new wall cutting them off from the city. "A survey this week showed half of the Israeli public wants to expel Arabs. It's impossible to expel Arabs, but it's possible to build a wall," said Ramon. The plan will correct two colossal historic mistakes Israel has made, he said. The first is the annexation of numerous Palestinian villages to Jerusalem immediately after the Six-Day War. The second is the separation fence that Ariel Sharon decided on, which left almost all of Jerusalem's municipal area on the Israeli side of the wall. "Sharon was afraid of confronting the radicals in his party," said Ramon. Under Ramon's plan, a wall would cut off several neighborhoods, consisting of some 200,000 Palestinians, from Jerusalem. These neighborhoods' residents would be denied resident status in Israel. Some would be allowed to work in the city with work permits, like West Bank Palestinians. Israel would keep the Old City and its surrounding neighborhoods, where an estimated 100,000 Palestinians live. PLO Secretary General Saeb Erekat told Haaretz, "This is not a 'separation' plan, it's an annexation plan. It would effectively separate people from their families, property, hospitals, schools, jobs and holy places...There can be no two-state solution without East Jerusalem as the capital of Palestine on the 1967 border".  - Security cabinet approves completion of barrier around Jerusalem. The security cabinet late Thursday night approved the immediate renewal of construction work on the security barrier around the area of Jerusalem, in an effort to halt Palestinian terrorist attacks against Israelis. It was one of a series of measures the cabinet took just hours after US Vice President Joe Biden flew out of Ben-Gurion Airport for Jordan. The security barrier has been largely frozen since 2007. Only some 470 km. of its 790-km. route has been erected. It has yet to be built around the Gush Etzion, Ariel and Ma'aleh Adumim settlement blocs. There are also gaps in the barrier around Jerusalem that need to be completed. The US has opposed construction of the barrier in the West Bank, but while Biden was here opposition leader Issac Herzog spoke with the vice president about the need to finish it. It's part of an overall separation plan Herzog has been promoting for the last month by way of lambasting Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for failing to deal with the wave of terrorism. "Only separation will stop terrorism. If we do not separate from the Palestinians, the Jews will continue to be killed here," he told Biden. The Prime Minister's Office had no further details about the renewal of the barrier's construction, including where the building would start or how much it would cost. Gaps are also to be closed by the Tarkumiya checkpoint that divides the West Bank from the area of Kiryat Gat. The security cabinet agreed to fast track legislation against those who help Palestinians to live and work illegally in the country and to make it easier to obtain permits to demolish the homes of terrorists.  - Rightist Group Boosting Efforts to Evict Arabs, Settle Jews in East Jerusalem. Ateret Cohanim now has 12 suits in the court system to evict over 300 East Jerusalem residents from their homes. An organization that settles Jews in Arab areas of East Jerusalem has filed six suits in recent months to evict 27 Palestinian families from their homes in the Silwan neighborhood. These latest suits by Ateret Cohanim, filed in the last four months, bring the total number of such suits now moving through the courts to 12. Altogether, the 12 suits affect 51 families made up of more than 300 people. The names of all the people involved in the suits are under a court-approved gag order. Security for each Jewish family now living in Silwan costs the state about 1 million shekels ($260,000) a year. All the land at issue was purchased by a Jewish trust more than a century ago for the purpose of housing Jewish immigrants from Yemen. Ateret Cohanim obtained control over the land in 2001, when it successfully asked the Jerusalem District Court, with backing from the Justice Ministry's administrator general, to appoint it as the trust's trustee, on the grounds that the original trustees – appointed back in 1899 – could no longer fulfill their role. In 2004, Ateret Cohanim began settling Jewish families in Silwan's Beit Yonatan building. Ever since, it has worked to evict Palestinians living on the trust's land, both by filing suits and by offering families generous compensation to leave voluntarily. So far, the organization has settled 10 Jewish families in Beit Yonatan. Over the past year, it has emptied another 13 apartments in Silwan, but most haven't yet gotten new tenants. A few months ago, however, it apparently decided to begin a concerted legal effort to clear all the land it controls of its Palestinian residents. Most of the 60 families targeted have lived there for decades. Attorney Ziad Kavar, one of a team of lawyers representing most of the Palestinian families, said he believes Ateret Cohanim is filing the suits now for fear that if it waits, the statute of limitations will expire. The organization obtained control of the land in November 2001, he noted, and the statute of limitations on unresolved land issues is 15 years, "so they have to file all the suits by November 2016". Kavar, however, argues that the statute of limitations should have expired long ago, because the administrator general was aware of these lands but made no effort to take control of them. Another unresolved legal question is whether the land really remained in Jewish hands after the Yemenite Jews left the neighborhood in the late 1930s during the Arab Revolt. Moreover, some of the Palestinians claim to have bought their plots from the Jewish owners, while others claim their plots aren't actually the ones mentioned in the original Ottoman-era deeds. Finally, the Palestinians argue that Jews shouldn't be allowed to regain property lost in the 1948 War of Independence as long as Palestinians aren't allowed to do the same. During that war,

Jordan conquered East Jerusalem and expelled its Jewish residents, while many Palestinians fled or were driven from the city's western part. "My father had a house in the [Old City's] Jewish Quarter," said Zuheir Rajbi, a Silwan resident. "If they want to remove me from here, then I want it back". "Israel, by means of discriminatory legislation, is helping to establish settlements in the heart of East Jerusalem and turning the many Palestinian refugees who live [in Silwan] into refugees once again," added attorney Muhammad Dahleh, Kawar's colleague. Moving more Jews into Silwan would also have far-reaching security and budgetary implications. Jewish residents of the area have repeatedly had their houses and cars stoned or firebombed, and they can only leave home in armored cars accompanied by an armed guard. Last year, the state spent 83 million shekels to guard Jews living in Palestinian neighborhoods of Jerusalem, while this year, the figure is expected to be 74 million shekels. A source familiar with the issue said the cost of security for Jews in the part of Silwan where Ateret Cohanim operates comes to 12 million shekels a year – about one million shekels per family. This budget, which comes from the Housing Ministry, doesn't include the extra costs to the police. Nor is Ateret Cohanim the only organization moving Jews into Silwan. Elad, for instance, has settled 25 families in a different part of Silwan over the past 18 months. Attorney Avraham Moshe Segal, who represents the trust, said the courts had ruled it to be the sole owner of the land in question, and therefore, "all the squatters against whom suits have been filed ought to vacate the land voluntarily. My client, going beyond the letter of the law, is even willing to compensate the squatters who vacate the trust's land voluntarily". The Ir Amim organization, which is helping the Palestinian residents, said that settler organizations, "under the auspices of a discriminatory system, are dispossessing and uprooting the Palestinian community from its houses, and dispossessing Israel of any chance of a future diplomatic solution". - The plan for the massive settler promoted visitor center on the edge of Silwan, directly across from the Old City walls, returns for discussion at the full committee after the committee nullified a previous Appeals Committee decision in January of this year. The director general of the Justice Ministry requested a new discussion some six months after the Appeals Committee – on which a member of the Justice Ministry sits – issued a decision to limit the scope of the settler promoted visitor center in Silwan. The full committee voted to hold a new discussion on the project, thereby avoiding the Appeals Committee's June 2015 decision. The January action was one in a series of steps taken to reverse the Appeals Committee's judgment, which reduced the overall area permitted for construction and restricted the range of activities permitted on site. After the June decision, Elad, the nationalist settler group promoting the Kedem Compound, brought the subject to the Interior Committee of the Knesset to exert political pressure. It also submitted a petition to the Administrative Court, which denied it. The Kedem Compound is a prime example of "touristic settlement" – a trend by which settlers, with the support of local and government officials, are able to expand their control of key Palestinian neighborhoods around the Historic Basin through management of tourist attractions like the City of David, just across the street from the Kedem site. - Israeli Agency OKs Right-wing NGO's Plans to Build Large Visitors' Center in East Jerusalem. After pressure from the Justice Ministry, the National Planning and Building Council overturns a decision to limit the size of the center, which the Elad group is planning to build in Silwan. The National Planning and Building Council ruled this week that a right-wing organization can build a 16,000-square-meter center in the East Jerusalem neighborhood of Silwan, overturning the decision by the council's appeals subcommittee limiting the size to 10,000 square meters. Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat and Justice Minister Ayelet Shaked had pushed for the reversal of the size restrictions on the center planned by the Elad group. The facility will cover 16,000 square meters and tower seven stories over the Givati parking lot, adjacent to the walls of the Old City. The national zoning panel reopened debate on the issue after Justice Ministry Director General Emi Palmor took the unusual step of attending a council meeting in January that voted on the proposal. In its two-page statement reversing the ruling of the appeals body, the national council said the Jerusalem Walls National Park, where the center is to be built, "is a unique tourist destination of the highest order in Israel that deserves encouraging tourism within it." The council members added that "goals like promoting a tourist experience, education by assimilating cultural, historical and archaeological heritage are a significant part of the designation of the national park." The council rejected all four appeals that had been partially accepted in June, which were signed off by the Emek Shaveh organization of archaeologists, the Ir Amim organization, Silwan residents and a group of intellectuals and architects. They asserted that the facility Elad seeks to build would damage antiquities, change the wall's skyline, undercut the needs of the Palestinian population and would constitute a dangerous precedent for private, politicized building in the city's most sensitive area. "The decision to build a huge building the size of a mall on top of Jerusalem antiquities, for the benefit of a political organization, arouses a fear that intense politicization of planning institutions and also hurts Jerusalem as a world heritage site," Emek Shaveh commented. "Instead of the antiquities being open and available to all, the planning committees decided, under pressure from politicians, to approve unprecedented damage of antiquities and to transfer cultural remains to Elad, which is a right-wing, nationalist, ideological organization. The Israel Antiquities Authority's support of this project is testimony to the inability of this body to protect Jerusalem's past and to maintain in the hands of the broader public for the sake of future generations. Elad commented that the plan realizes a modern tourist-oriented program for early Jerusalem near the Western Wall. "The plan will increase the ability to handle visitors in early Jerusalem and is part of the national tourist challenge of improving the visitor experience and improving tourist infrastructure for the benefit of all who come to Jerusalem,” the organization stated. (Haaretz 26 March 2016)

- The Government Declares 2342 Dunams South of Jericho as State Land. The Army radio exposed today that on March 10, 2016, during Vice President Biden's visit to Israel, the Civil Administration's Head of the Government Property signed a declaration according to which 2,342 dunams (580 acres) south of Jericho are now government property. This declaration of state land comes two months after it was reported that the Minister of Defense approved a declaration of 1,500 dunams as state lands in an area south of Jericho. It appears that the January approval by the MoD permitted the land declaration which is now being implemented. However, the size of the land declared is larger than what was published in January and includes 2,342 dunams. The declaration, which is in fact a confiscation, was meant for the expansion of nearby settlements as well as for trade and tourism projects operated by the settlers. This is one of the largest declarations in recent years, and it is another illustration of the government's policy of land confiscation, including those far beyond the green line and the separation barrier. (Peace Now 15 March 2016)

- 19 years later, Jordan Valley town gets building approval. After a construction freeze of 19 years, Defense Minister signs off on urban building plan - is it a sign of approaching sovereignty? Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon (Likud) has signed his approval for the urban building plan of Hemdat, a town in the Jordan Valley that has had its construction frozen for the past 19 years. Shalom Kuperman, a member of the Hemdat secretariat and one of the most long-standing residents of the town, spoke to Arutz Sheva on Wednesday about the welcome news. Kuperman noted that around 40 families live in the town, and said that with the approval "we are approaching building processes for a new neighborhood." Without an approval on the urban building plan, all construction in the town had automatically been classified as illegal, blocking the natural development of the town - a situation replicated in Jewish towns and villages throughout Judea and Samaria. "This approval opens for us all the possibilities for developing Hemdat and the (Jordan) Valley," he said. Kuperman described how established families have been waiting to build their homes in Hemdat, and likewise new families hoping to join the community have been delayed as they couldn't have houses built for them. Aside from personal houses, the long wait for approval has caused the town's synagogue, kindergarten and day care center to be housed in caravans. In addition, roads and infrastructure have not been developed or maintained for nearly 20 years - but now that all is set to change. "As a town of law-abiding citizens who want to develop the (Jordan) Valley and the entire country, this delayed us. We couldn't draw up contracts for the purchase and sale of houses. It delayed all development of life here," said Kuperman. (Israeli National News 3 March 2016)

- An Israeli weekly newspaper revealed that Israeli government is advancing construction plans to build about 1,000 housing units in four illegal settlements in occupied Jerusalem despite the stiff international criticism. Kol Ha'ir Hebrew newspaper said that Israeli settlement construction is continuing within the existing settlements in occupied Jerusalem under the supervision of the Israeli government. The 1,000 housing units are scheduled to be built in Har Homa, Pisgat Ze'ev, Maale Adumim, and Modi'in settlements. Har Homa settlement, which was established in 1997, houses nearly 30,000 settlers. Israeli authorities work at expanding the settlement to house 40,000 settlers. Israel's construction of settlements in occupied Jerusalem, which Palestinians seek as their future capital, and other Palestinian territories is illegal under international law. Israel's refusal to cease settlement-building activities has been widely condemned as an obstacle to achieving lasting peace between Israelis and Palestinians. The housing announcement would greatly escalate tensions in occupied Jerusalem, which has been the scene of violent unrest for months. (Pal Info 4 March 2016)

- Peace Now Settlement Watch: Despite Previous Commitments to the High Court: The State Seeks to Legalize Construction on Private Palestinian Land. The State updated the High Court of Justice on its position regarding Peace Now's petition for the evacuation of 17 structures in the outpost of Derech Ha'Avot. Due to the "request of the political echelon" and despite its previous commitments, the State announced that it seeks to work on the retroactive legalization of 10 of the structures built on private

Palestinian land in the illegal outpost. The State hopes to do so by applying a "First Registration" procedure, a long complex procedure asking applicants to prove legal ownership of a land. This comes only two years after this land had been surveyed and was not declared state land, as it had clear owners. If the court accepts the State's position, in the best case scenario the evacuation of the illegal structures as well as the return of the land to its Palestinian owners will be postponed by several years, and in the worst case scenario, the State will find a way to retroactively legalize the structures. As for the remaining 7 structures, the state argued that it will evacuate them within two years. (Peace Now 8 March 2016)

- Palestinians Sue Alleged Settlement Supporters for $34.5 Billion in U.S. Court. Sheldon Adelson, Irving Moskowitz, Friends of the IDF, Bank Leumi, Bank Hapoalim and Volvo are among the respondents named in a suit filed in Washington D.C. A group of American Palestinians living in the West Bank have filed a $34.5 billion lawsuit in a Washington court against a string of U.S.-based tycoons and companies allegedly connected to the Israeli occupation. Among those named in the suit are casino mogul Sheldon Adelson, philanthropist Irving Moskowitz and evangelist John Hagee. Brought by Washington lawyer Martin McMahon on behalf of Bassem al-Tamimi, of Nabi Saleh, and about 35 others, the suit alleges that the respondents contravened American law against money laundering, in terms of which the transfer of money for the purposes of committing a crime is illegal. According to the plaintiffs, the establishment of settlements in the occupied territories has been accompanied by violence, death and injury, the destruction of houses and the burning of trees and is thus criminal. Tamimi is a long-time anti-settlement activist. The current suit complements one he brought in December against the U.S. Treasury for allowing tax-free donations to settlements. The respondents fall into three groups: individuals, non-governmental organizations and corporations. In addition to Adelson, Moskowitz and Hagee, others mentioned in the suit include Israeli businessman Lev Leviev, media mogul and film producer Haim Saban and former diplomat Elliot Abrams. The American NGOs named in the suit include Friends of the IDF in the U.S., Friends of Ariel, Honenu, a group of pro-settlements lawyers, the Hebron Fund, the Karnei Shomron Fund and the Falic Family Foundation. Among the business named in the suit are Bank Leumi, Bank Hapoalim, Volvo (whose vehicles are allegedly used in house demolitions,) Africa-Israel, Motorola, Hewlett Packard and RE/MAX real estate. The suit was filed in the Federal District Court of Washington DC on Monday. The lawyers for the plaintiffs told Al Jazeera that they expected protracted legal arguments over the court's jurisdiction and potential dismissal proceedings. It could take five years or more for the case to come to trial, if at all, said attorney Jameson Fox. "We have cases going that have lasted 13 years, so we are used to long cases," he added. - Palestinian Casualties Rise as Israel Police Up Usage of Foam-tipped Bullets. Increase in the number of anti-riot bullets fired matches growing violence in Jerusalem and elsewhere. Israel has investigated 15 complaints into injuries, many of them children, but no policemen have been indicted. Dozens of Palestinians, including many children, have been injured by foam-tipped bullets since 2014. The Justice Ministry has investigated 15 complaints into injuries, but no policemen have been indicted as yet – despite orders that place restrictions on how the bullets are fired. Over the past two years, 57,000 foam-tipped bullets have been fired, most of them in East Jerusalem. Figures on the numbers of foam-tipped bullets fired were provided by the police to the Association for Civil Rights in Israel. ACRI made the request under the Freedom of Information Law. The figures show a rise in the number of such bullets fired, matching the rise in violence in Jerusalem and elsewhere in the country. In 2014, more than 35,000 foam-tipped bullets were fired. Last year, the figure was some 22,000. By comparison, 3,608 foam-tipped bullets were fired in 2011, 5,589 in 2012 and 7,162 in 2014. The figures also show a change from the softer, blue-foam bullets to the heavier and more dangerous black-tipped bullets. Until 2014, no black-tipped bullets were used at all. After the black bullets came into service in 2014, half of all foam-tipped bullets fired were of that variety. Last year, though, 94 percent of all foam-tipped bullets fired were black-tipped. Salah Sleiman, from the East Jerusalem village of Isawiyah, was 11 and a half last November. One morning, school was canceled because so few pupils had shown up. Like every other day at that time, the village was seething, with clashes between young stone-throwers and police. When Sleiman returned home, his mother sent him to the store to buy vegetables. On his way back from the store, he said, he wanted to cross the road when he got too close to a violent demonstration. He gestured to a policeman that he wanted to cross, but the policeman allegedly shot a foam-tipped bullet at him and missed. Sleiman was shot again when he tried to cross the street again. - In first since 2010, Israel halts food imports from West Bank. Israeli authorities prevent five major Palestinian foodstuff companies from bringing their goods to Jerusalem, firms charge. Israel is preventing West Bank producers from transporting their goods into East Jerusalem, manufacturers said Sunday, in what appears to be the first move of its kind in over five years.. The staff of five Palestinian companies — whose goods have been prevented from entering Jerusalem — protested Sunday near Israel’s Ofer Prison outside Ramallah. Israeli authorities reportedly told the pertinent firms last Wednesday that their products would not be allowed to pass through the commercial Beitunia Crossing, the Palestinian Ma’an News Agency reported. The five companies are Hamoda, al-Juneidi Dairy and Food Products, al-Rayyan Dairies, Salwa Foods, and Siniora Food Industries. The move appeared to be the first time since 2010 that Israel has prohibited West Bank goods from entering East Jerusalem, which it considers sovereign Israeli territory. In that year, Israeli authorities attempted a similar prohibition of West Bank food products, saying they did not meet Israeli standards. (Time of Israel 13 March 2016)

The unit is the second group initiative by members of the settlements of Kfar Adumim, Nofei Prat, Alon and Mitzpeh Yeriho. They also work together in the Jerusalem Periphery Forum, the objective of which is to prevent Bedouin construction on both sides of Highway No. 1 between Ma'aleh Adumim and Jericho. The Bedouin construction is partially funded by the European Union. The forum plans to conduct patrols in the area in the coming four days (Purim and the weekend,) when Civil Administration inspectors will be on vacation. A spokesman for the forum told Haaretz that the patrols are meant to prevent a repetition of last year's events, when the Purim vacation was exploited for the construction of 22 prefabricated buildings for Bedouin in several compounds in the area. In early January, the settlement of Ein Prat invited "volunteers of the project for guarding the land and the residents of Gush Adumim," to an informational evening in Kfar Adumim to be conducted by the police. It presented the initiative as "the formation of a policing unit as part of the activity for guarding the land and maintaining security in the Gush Adumim area." According to the Facebook post, work on the joint project with the police has been going on for a long time, and now "conditions have ripened for setting it in motion: Turning the voluntary activity to guard the land into a voluntary police unit in which the volunteers are residents of Gush Adumim. "We will operate the unit to maintain security and guard the land of the Gush in full coordination with the Ma'aleh Adumim police and under their auspices. The volunteers will have a police volunteer card and will use police vehicles and operate according to the law, in order to prevent hostile terror activity and criminal activity, which to our regret takes place frequently in the area, and of course to prevent Palestinian takeover of Gush land." The liaisons for the unit, according to the post, are the four security officers of the settlements, community policeman Itzik Ovadia and Yaniv Aharoni, the Jerusalem Periphery Forum's coordinator of Gush Adumim land. Forum spokesman Arik Ben Shimon told Haaretz that the police volunteer unit is in the final stages of formation and has not yet begun to operate. He said that the volunteers, who sign for weapons, will be accompanied by policemen, as is usual in all volunteer police units in the country, and that they will operate in the areas of the Blue Line – the master plan boundaries of the settlement area which includes the territory in which Bedouin communities are dispersed. Dudi Asraf, spokesman for the Judea and Samaria Police District, told Haaretz in a written response that volunteer police units exist throughout the country and provide enhanced service to civilians. Each unit is headed by a community policeman and volunteers are trained according to a national standard. Once trained, they are authorized to operate in the field. The police consider the volunteers policemen for all intents and purposes and high-quality reinforcements. "Gush Adumim volunteers have been operating for years," Asraf wrote, though his statement contradicts the information given by the forum spokesman. Regarding the patrols in the next four days, the forum's Ben Shimon told Haaretz that several people had signed up and more were expected. Owners of four-wheel drive vehicles have been asked to contribute six hours of their time and to “help to patrol the Adumim area and to keep track of illegal European and Palestinian construction.” Just patrolling the area will serve as a deterrent, Ben Shimon said. The intention is to mount similar patrols during the Passover vacation, when the Civil Administration inspectors will again be on vacation. “The volunteers will patrol the area and will carry out surveillance and report to the police in order to prevent illegal construction designed to establish a terror state on Highway no. 1,” Ben Shimon wrote to Haaretz. Bedouin residents report that the inspection and demolition activity of the Civil Administration and the inspection activity of the right-wing association Regavim for guarding state land has been so intensive in recent months that they had the impression that the settlers themselves were not engaged in spying on them. - Settler housing starts spiked by 26% in 2015, government report finds. The CBS releases its quarterly report as the United Nations Human Rights Council is set to vote on a resolution condemning Jewish building over the pre-1967 lines. Housing starts in West Bank settlements leaped by 26 percent in 2015 over the previous year, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics. The CBS released its quarterly report on Wednesday. The United Nations Human Rights Council is set to vote Thursday on a resolution condemning Jewish building over the 1949 armistice lines, calling on Israel to halt such activity. The CBS data were part of an overall report that showed that starts rose by 3.9% and completions fell by 2.8%, while completions in the settlements rose by 25%. In real numbers, ground was broken for 1,913 settler homes in 2015 compared with 1,516 units in 2014. Similarly, work on 2,033 homes was finished in 2015 compared to 1,615 that were completed in the previous year. Right-wing politicians have complained in the last year about a de facto freeze in buildings within the West Bank settlement blocs. The CBS does not break down its data by settlement, but does provide statistics on the five largest Jewish communities in Judea and Samaria: Modi'in Illit, Beitar Illit, Ma'aleh Adumim, Givat Ze'ev and Ariel. Historically, building in these five settlements has often made up over 50% of all such West Bank Jewish building, but since Netanyahu entered office in 2009, construction in those five communities has dropped. CBS data showed, however, that the spike in building last year was due in large part to increased construction in the five communities, which made up 48% of the starts and 55% of the completions. The city of Ariel, which has typically lagged behind when it comes to building, had the highest number of completions in 2015, with 566 finished homes, followed by 181 in the Ma'aleh Adumim. The largest number of starts was in Ma'aleh Adumim, where ground was broken for 246 homes, followed by 216 units in Ariel. The CBS data were limited to Judea and Samaria and did not include Jewish building in east Jerusalem. Separately, the Civil Administration adjusted the borders of the Eli settlement based on new information it obtained through an ongoing study into land status in the Area C of the West Bank. As a result of the new map, 61.2 hectares (153 acres) of property were declared to be state land included within the boundaries of the settlement and 54.1 hectares were excluded from the settlement. As a result, the land within the settlement's boundaries grew by 7.1 hectares. (JPOST 24 March 2016)

- Ratifying the settlement project “Kedem” in Silwan. The District Council for Planning and Building ratified on Wednesday night the project of Elad settlement organization known as “Kedem project- City of David- Old City of Jerusalem” which is intended to be established at the entrance of Wadi Hilweh in Silwan south of Al-Aqsa Mosque. Wadi Hilweh Information Center explained in a statement that the District Council's ratification of the settlement project came after an urgent session was held at the council's headquarters yesterday in which the locals of Wadi Hilweh withdrew from in protest against racial dealing with them after members of the District Committee interrupted them when they were talking about the harm resulting from establishing a settlement compound on their lands without paying any attention to their needs; the session also lacked an Arabic interpreter. Lawyer Sami Arshid explained that the District Council rejected on Wednesday night all the appeals and objections submitted against “Kedem” project, and cancelled the decision of the Appeals Commission in the Supreme Planning Council which canceled the project, and made the District Committee's decision of approving the project in 2014 effective. The lawyer also added that the District Council's decision was briefed in two pages. It cancelled the Appeals Committee's decision issued in June 2014 which had 140 pages, and did not explain any legal or planning reasons to adopt this project. Arshid pointed out that the District Council requested to hear the appeals submitted within 4 hours only and gave each presentation 15 minutes only which was considered not enough time; note that previous presentation during the last hearing were for two days, eight hours a day. Arshid added that the locals of Wadi Hilweh, Eir Amim and Amiq Shafeh institutions and a group of Israeli academics had submitted their appeals to the District Committee's decision to ratify the project in 2014. After hearing the objections by the appeals committee, the project was rejected. Arshid added that the District Council's decision was purely political and illegal as the council discussed the appeals again which is a procedure that rarely happens showing that political interference at the highest levels took place to carry out this session in a new attempt to implement the settlement project while neglecting the needs of Silwan and the harm the project causes. Arshid confirmed he will submit an appeal to the Israeli courts to request the cancellation of the District Council's decision and adopt the Appeals Commission's decision. According to the plan of Elad settlement organization, the project aims at building a tourist building of 5 floors (9000 square meters) to be used by the scientists and Israeli Antiquities Department in addition to building conference rooms and education rooms as well as parking lots for settlers and tourists. The building will also include commercial stores and offices for Elad organization. Wadi Hilweh Information Center and Wadi Hilweh Committee denounced in a joint statement the ratification of the Elad settlement project which will be established at the entrance of the neighborhood. Wadi Hilweh Locals' Committee denounced the District Council's response to the political interference regarding the project which only serves settlement goals. After 9 months of rejecting the project, a new session will be held to discuss the appeals and objections submitted at the same time when Elad organizations continue their excavation works in the neighborhood in preparation for the project. The center also added that ratifying the project will be the first step of ratifying similar settlement projects in Silwan which is considered an important area historically and religiously while neglecting the native residents and land owners that suffer on a daily basis from the settlement outposts in their neighborhoods. The center and committee also warned from implementing such a huge project across from the southern wall of Al-Aqsa Mosque and requested the UNESCO to immediately interfere because this project will affect a historic city listed under monuments at risk. They also appealed for the international community to support the locals of Silwan and prevent this project from being implemented. The committee added that the settlement project will be established on the lands of the residents of Silwan which were used as farms until Jerusalem was occupied in 1967. After the occupation, the Israeli authorities confiscated the lands and demolished two rooms that were owned by Abdo family and then turned it into a parking lot. In 2003, Elad settlement organization took control of the lands and started planning for the implementation of the settlement project. The carried out continuous excavations in the area of “Dung Gate” and demolished an Islamic cemetery that was 1200 years old in addition to demolishing Umayyad, Ottoman, Byzantine and Roman ruins such as rooms, poles and arches and only left a few of them claiming they are they “ruins of the Second Temple”. - Illegal construction in the territories: no oversight, no enforcement. The State Comptroller's report states that the Civil Administration does not conduct oversight and enforcement in the C areas; defense systems company Rafael was found to be operating in violation of public bid regulations. Deficiencies in staffing processes at the Defense Ministry, a lack of bids for contracts with defense-industry company Rafael, severe shortcomings in the oversight of construction operations in the West Bank area (which have a wide effect), in both the Jewish and Palestinian sectors: These are just some of the problems highlighted by State Comptroller Joseph Shapira in his report of the Israeli defense apparatus, published Monday. The report included an additional section on nuclear energy affairs, which could not be published. The section that deals with illegal construction states that the data from oversight computer systems as well as end-of-year reports indicate that most of the illegal construction projects found in the 2008-2013 period have not been demolished. The Comptroller stated that the low enforcement rate against these cases of illegal construction inflicts severe harm to the rule of law, as well as to equality before the law. He added that it also raised concerns about damage to the state's deterrence against construction lawbreakers in general, and in the West Bank particularly. The Comptroller further found that the Civil Administration was not conducting oversight and enforcement activities in areas with approved construction outlines. The Civil Administration does not conduct long-term oversight on Israeli construction projects that are part of an approved outline, and does not oversee and enforce laws in regard to many homes that were built illegally in several different Israeli towns in the West Bank. Some of these homes were built on privately-owned land without permits or approved outlines. The Comptroller examined how Rafael (a government-owned Israeli defense technology company) handed out contracts. The company issues about 400 of these contracts a year, with a cost of over NIS 80 million. The Comptroller stated that Rafael did not consistently make sure to operate by fair competitive practices.

According to the report, Rafael had a loose attitude on regulations about bids and contracts – regulations that the company itself had put in place. The Defense Ministry was found to have deficiencies with its hiring procedures, although some deficiencies found in previous inspections were corrected. The way government authorities inspect and oversee these procedures. The Defense Ministry said in response, "The Ministry of Defense operates in a number of ways in order to pick and recruit the most experienced and fitting professionals for the senior core positions at the Ministry, while making sure to give extra care to civil service regulations. All of the candidates mentioned in the report have proven, wide, varied, professional and command experience, and were approved by the Civil Service Commission." (Ynetnews 29 March 2016)

- Bills Granting Tax Breaks to Israeli Settlers Pass First Knesset Readings. Zionist Union MK Merav Michaeli: This is creeping annexation and encouragement of investment in settlements. Two bills that would grant economic benefits to settlement residents passed their first readings in the Knesset Tuesday morning. The first would introduce a new tax payment mechanism for purchasers of homes in settlements, enabling them to avoid dual payment to the Civil Administration and the Income Tax Authority. The second bill enables settlers to obtain the same tax breaks given within the Green Line for profits earned in the territories. The first bill is meant to ease the bureaucracy currently involved in home purchases in settlements and prevent settlers from paying a double tax to the state and to the Civil Administration. Currently, Israeli citizens who wish to purchase assets over the Green Line must pay a mandatory fee to the Civil Administration as well as a purchase tax to the state. The bill says that the fee paid to the regional authority will be deducted from the tax to the state. But in most cases, the purchase tax is paid to the state before the fee is paid, and so the refund is only given after the citizen has first made the two payments out of pocket. Only after he has paid twice can he request the refund from the state tax authorities. The bill proposes an upgraded payment mechanism in which the Land Tax Authority will relay the payments to the Civil Administration so that double taxation is prevented. During the Knesset session, Meretz MK Esawi Freige criticized the decision. "The purpose of the bill is to make it easier for purchasers of land in the West Bank and Gaza. To put it bluntly, this is creeping annexation and they're all collaborating with this annexation, each in his own way". The second bill says that settlers who are eligible for a grant promoting capital investment due to profits earned in the territories will now also be entitled to the tax breaks given within the Green Line according to Israeli law. Currently, an Income Tax Authority rule says that income produced in the territories is subject to the same taxation as within the Green Line. But the laws to encourage capital investment and capital investment in agriculture do not grant authority to give benefits and grants to residents of the settlements, in accordance with an administrative arrangement set by government decisions. Freige also protested this bill. “Instead of promoting Bnei Brak, they’re promoting Elon Moreh,” he said. “At a time when the world is ostracizing and boycotting the settlements and their products, the State of Israel is encouraging investment in the settlements,” Zionist Union chairperson Merav Michaeli said. “The Netanyahu government is putting [Habayit Hayehudi leader Naftali] Bennett’s ideology into action and applying creeping annexation in the territories. The damage Netanyahu is doing to Israel in the world will take years to repair”. (Haaretz 30 March 2016)
